To Whom It May Concern,

The Alliance of Natural Resource Outreach and Service Programs (ANROSP) promotes active stewardship of natural resources and ecosystems by providing leadership, information, and resources to science-based outreach and service programs. ANROSP is a national network that supports the establishment and expansion of our partnering programs at state and local levels, which builds stewardship capacity within agencies and organizations by training and engaging volunteers in natural resource education and conservation. Our volunteers go by various names such as Master Naturalists, Certified Citizen Naturalist Volunteers, Master Conservationists, Nature Stewards, and more.

Locally, Pennsylvania Master Naturalists work to provide knowledgeable and skilled service through interpretive programs, educational classes, natural resource stewardship, community science initiatives, and hundreds of other efforts related to natural resources conservation outreach, education, and conservation. To date, Pennsylvania Master Naturalists have provided more than $3 million-worth of volunteer service in the state.

This year, our annual conference takes place September 18-20 in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania and we invite you to build the capacity for natural resource outreach and stewardship with us by sponsoring our conference!

Our attendees include natural resource professionals and educators, program directors, and volunteers from around the country. Your support will allow us to offer scholarships and travel awards that will permit broader participation of members, afford us opportunities to build meaningful connections by underwriting our receptions and networking breaks, and facilitate exploration of the natural areas of the Pittsburgh and surrounding area. We'll demonstrate our appreciation by acknowledging your support on our conference website, in our outreach efforts, and in program materials.
